

Upland council okays Euclid scenic corridor

By DON GREEN
Staff Writer

The Upland City Council Monday night approved a variety of land-use standards aimed at preserving Euclid Avenue as a scenic route and limiting conversion of homes to commercial use.

With Mayor George Gibson absent, the council unanimously adopted a scenic corridor "overlay zone" for the length of Euclid Avenue within the city.

The overlay zone — a text amendment to the municipal code — was the final third and most discussed aspect of the city's Euclid study.

A general plan amendment and zone change covering specific areas of Euclid from southern city limits to just north of Foothill Boulevard were approved June 18.

Upland first imposed a moratorium on accepting most applications for new development last October. That moratorium, extended once, expired at the end of May and halted some project filings while the study was under way.

On Monday night, the council reviewed sections of the scenic corridor zone for more than three hours, hearing suggestions from the Upland Chamber of Commerce and the Ontario-Upland-Chino Board of Realtors.

After the zone was approved, Mayor Pro Tem John McCarthy commented, "I know you didn't get everything you wanted, but I hope you got a document you can live with."

Both Eugene Bello, president of the chamber, and Chuck Lawrence, president of the board of realtors, said they had.

The two organizations had a hand in revising the document through several planning commission and council hearings, and most of what the council approved Monday was contained in the fourth draft of the scenic corridor zone.

The text amendment, general plan and zone change are scheduled to go into effect in early September.

Euclid Avenue has been found eligible for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places. Planning Director Bill Young noted that although much of the scenic corridor zone's provisions are directed specifically at Euclid, the general provisions could apply to three other potential scenic routes in the city.

Young told the council, "We have seen the results and are seeing the results of uncontrolled development and uncontrolled conversion of residential structures" in Upland and other cities.

Euclid has a "special character we feel is vital to be preserved and enhanced," Young said.

He noted that a key intent of the overlay zone — so called because the text amendment adds special standards for land use on Euclid without changing the actual zoning — is to encourage combining of adjacent lots for commercial use rather than spot conversions of residential properties.

Neither Bello nor Lawrence expressed much optimism that such combining of lots would take place. Bello said that "you're not going to find four lots together" for such development, and Lawrence said that even two lots together were unlikely.

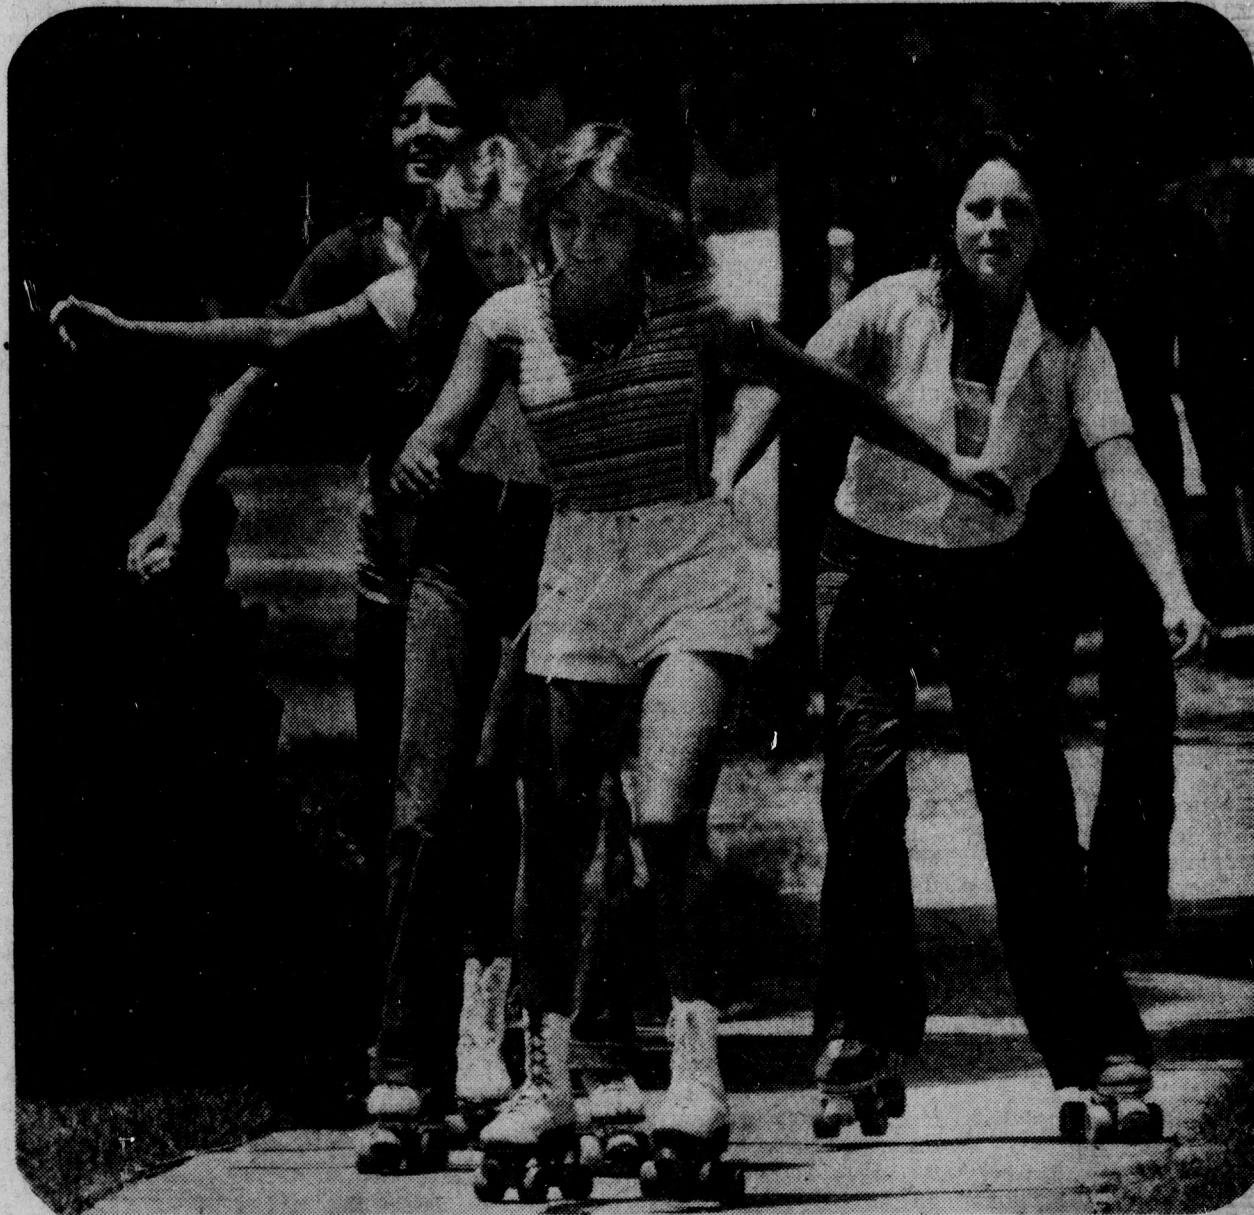

Bello said he was pleased with some of the revisions in the scenic corridor zone, including a provision that allows a minimum front-yard setback of 15 feet as long as the average setback for the structure is at least 25 feet.

A 25-foot minimum setback had been proposed, but Councilwoman Ina Petokas and others said the change will permit greater variety in building design.

The corridor zone puts the conditional-use permit as the city's controlling mechanism over expansion, modification or conversion of land uses. In addition, certain uses — such as adult-only businesses, auto repair shops and convalescent homes with more than five patients — will be prohibited on Euclid.

Young said a suggestion by the board of realtors for two sets of site development standards — one for conversions and one for new structures — would "appear to emasculate" the intent to have lots joined for commercial development. His view was backed by the council.

The board had asked that specific minimum lot standards for conversion be deleted and be replaced with a more general provision that all sites be of "sufficient size and area to adequately accommodate the intended use."

Woman named to fill school board seat

By DON GREEN
Staff Writer

Diane Rivord, coordinator of volunteers at Central School, has been named to fill a vacancy on the Central school board until elections this November.

The school board made its unanimous selection after hearing short presentations by five applicants for the vacancy — left when Trustee Bruce Van Orden resigned this month — and meeting for at least 45 minutes in executive session.

Rivord's statement provided an unusual twist. She is in Michigan on a family vacation planned since December and submitted a tape recording outlining some of her views on the district and education.

Superintendent Norman Guith said Rivord cannot assume office for 30 days, a period set aside by state law to allow petitions for a special election.

Signatures from registered voters in the district totaling at least 5 percent of the votes cast in the last regular board election would mandate filling the trustee post by election. Such a special election would be consolidated with the Nov. 6 regular election and the post would remain vacant until then.

Rivord has worked three hours a day on the district payroll as the volunteer coordinator at Central School. Guith said she must resign this paid part-time post to become a trustee.

He noted Rivord has been the volunteer coordinator since 1976 and that the program pulled in more than 9,000 hours of volunteer work by parents and other district residents this school year.

In her application, Rivord noted she had two children attending school in the district and has been attending board meetings since 1972.

Along with her work as volunteer coordinator, she is taking classes at Chaffey College toward an associate arts degree in business administration.

She has served as a classroom volunteer, on the PTA boards for Cucamonga Junior High and Central schools and on the PTA council. She also served on several district committees.

Lasting repairs for sidewalks planned by officials in Upland

After a year of relying literally on patchwork, Upland is looking at spending $100,000 on more lasting sidewalk repairs throughout the city.

And in southeast Upland — where residents rated completion and repair of sidewalks their No. 1 priority in a survey last year — just over $125,000 has been earmarked for new sidewalks.

The city is preparing a list for a neighborhood improvement project in the southeast, using largely federal community block grant funds, to go out to bid.

City Manager Lee Travers said city staff is recommending the $100,000 be spent during fiscal 1979-80 on sidewalk maintenance. The council will consider the authorization when the budget comes up for final adoption July 16.

Council members have already given their nod to setting aside $46,503 of the amount for sidewalk repairs. That figure was freed from the city's general fund and equals the difference between the approximately $270,000 in federal revenue-sharing funds the city originally estimated and the more than $300,000 it will receive in 1979-80.

Travers said that in contrast to the asphalt patching by city crews this year, the entire $100,000 would go toward contracted "permanent" repairs in the fiscal year that began Sunday.

The program would allow the city to "catch up, even moving ahead a little," on prior sidewalk maintenance, he added.

During 1976-77, Upland spent $40,321 on sidewalk maintenance, and in 1977-78, the amount was $53,000, Travers said.

The same figure was proposed for 1978-79, but slashed to $24,000 for temporary asphalt patching following passage of Proposition 13.

City administration proposed, but council rejected, shifting the financial burden of sidewalk maintenance from the city to individual property owners last October. The transfer was cited as one way to reduce city expenditures under Proposition 13, but residents objected and blamed city trees for their damaged sidewalks.

Travers said last week the $100,000 proposed would be used to replace the worst of the sidewalk damage.

On the future of sidewalk maintenance, Travers said, "It's got to be an individual decision each year as far as I can see."

City officials have expressed concern over potential liability in accidents related to damaged sidewalks, but the city manager indicated he is unaware of any suits pending.

"It just doesn't look so good," he commented.

Assistant City Engineer John Wisz said the city hopes to go out to bid late this month or early next month on a 90-day, $170,000 neighborhood improvement project for southeast Upland.

He cautioned that recent bids have been coming in higher than expected and that if the trend continues it could cut into the scope of the project.

Just over $125,000 would be spent on new sidewalks, covering 1.5 miles of current gaps in the sidewalk system.

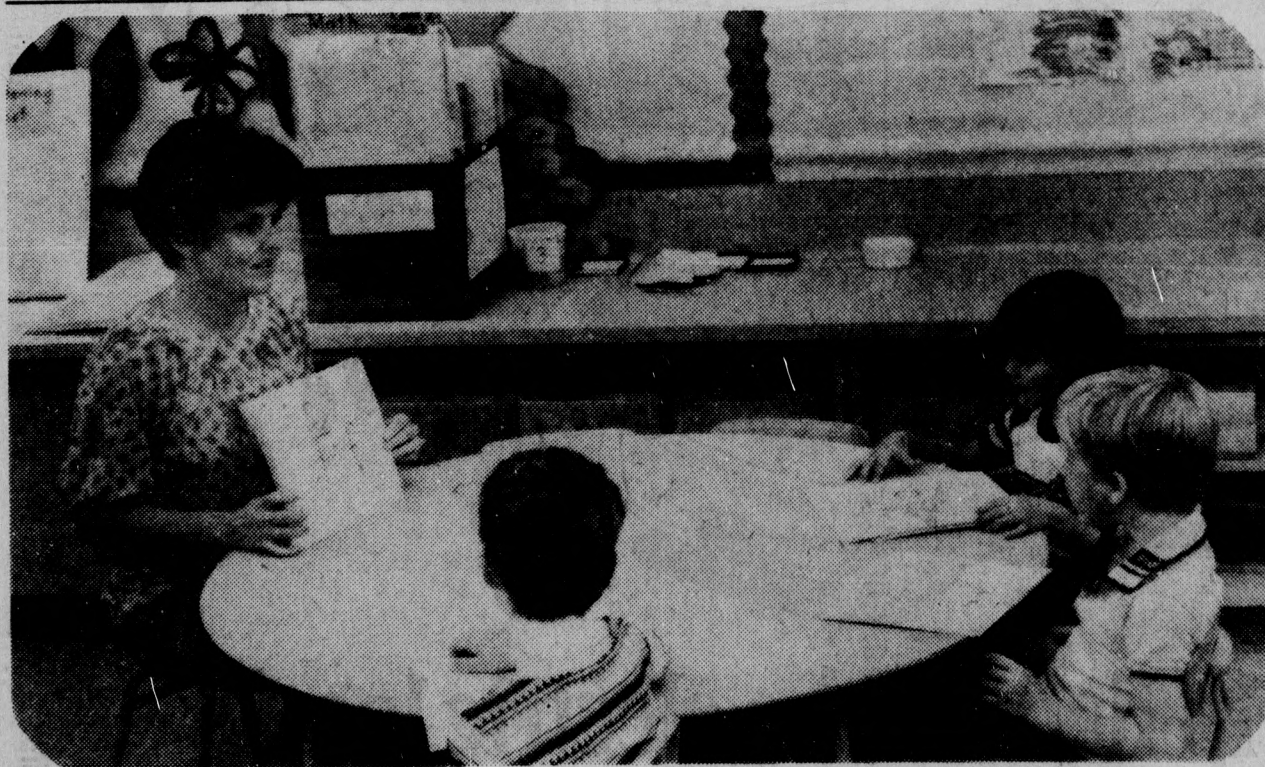

The project would also provide 20 wheelchair ramps and six parking stalls for the handicapped in the Upland Town Center and paving of three dirt alleys south of Salina Street, north of Chaffee Street and east of Bodenhamer Avenue at the eastern edge of the city.

The major sidewalk additions are: — The south side of Eighth Street between Euclid and 11th avenues.

the south side of Olive Street between Euclid and Sultana avenues, the west side of Third Avenue between Seventh and Eighth streets and the north side of Ninth Street between 11th and Grove avenues.

Wisz said polystyrene will be tried as underground barriers to encourage downward growth of tree roots in an effort to minimize future sidewalk damage.

Along with federal community block grant funds — limited in application to Upland's target area, roughly half of the southeast quadrant — state money for bicycle and pedestrian facilities (SB 821) and federal funds for removing architectural barriers are included in the project.

Early reading lessons

Anita Sornborger, a kindergarten teacher at Cabrillo School in Upland, reviews the alphabet through flash cards with pupils Eric Heins, Scott Tatman and John Fitzgerald. Sornborger and Martha Varvis have offered a voluntary reading program to their kindergarten students this year at the school. The kindergartners took turns in groups of six returning to class for afternoon instruction two days a week. The 5-year-olds also checked out material to continue learning on their own after the sessions. (Staff photo)

Kindergartners learn to read

Cabrillo School in Upland recently concluded a volunteer reading program for kindergartners.

The 5-year-olds in the classes of Anita Sornborger and Martha Varvis were given the opportunity to return to school two days a week for special reading instruction.

The children took turns in groups of six for the instruction sessions of 90 minutes lasting six to seven weeks.

At the afternoon sessions, students were given a variety of pre-reading and reading instruction geared to their levels of comprehension.

When kindergartners completed the mini-course, many continued reading through by checking out materials provided by Sornborger and Varvis.

Three of Sornborger's pupils at a recent session read from course material that included questions for self-testing, while Varvis led three students in learning the alphabet by presenting flash cards of letters.

Principal Oliver Soderberg said the program first began five years ago and that Sornborger and Varvis chose to continue the voluntary program this year.

"And the results have been tremendous," he said, noting, "Many enter first grade able to read."

VINNIE LOMEO

Marx 'look' profitable for Groucho imitator

Who's that man around town who looks like a reincarnation of Groucho Marx?

He's Vinnie Lomeo, a former pizza restaurateur from Arizona who is visiting his niece, Shari Rinchiuso, in Upland.

He has been stopped on the streets of San Juan Capistrano and Los Angeles while visiting Southern California by people who gasp at his resemblance to the late comedian.

The attention isn't new for 52-year-old Lomeo. He began his career as a Marx look-alike about five years ago, when he opened a pizza parlor in Arizona, he said.

The restaurant became a popular place to stop and eat and have a picture taken with Lomeo, he said. Lomeo sold the restaurant last year.

When Lomeo got out of the restaurant business, he decided to capitalize on his look-alike appearance. He's been booked at state fairs as the sidekick of a Hollywood stunt man and has received offers to promote various products, using the Marx guise.

Has Lomeo ever met the famed comedian?

Not exactly. He saw Marx at an Arizona restaurant 25 years ago when Lomeo was a janitor.

They didn't look alike then.

Children of God

Family deals with losing daughter to cult

By LEIGH FENLY
Copley News Service

"In eight years we only got two letters from our daughter. We knew she was somewhere involved with the Children of God. Then one day we got a call from Argentina and she was asking for round-trip tickets to come back. She said she could stay five weeks, that she wanted to prove to us she loved us."

"She wanted to show us that the Children of God was not like Jonestown or Guyana."

Bill and Betty Rambur sat recently in the Chula Vista, Calif., house where they reared their daughter Kay, remembering the hope they felt after that phone call. After eight years, they believed they finally had the chance to talk to Kay, to change her mind about the Children of God (COG) cult and its controversial leader, David Berg.

It was hope that propelled the Ramburs to scrape together $4,000 for tickets so Kay, her husband, also a cult member, and three children could come home. The family arrived shortly after Christmas. They left abruptly seven days later.

"They were in such a hurry they left their 6-month-old baby lying here on the floor," says Joan McCullough, the Ramburs' youngest daughter. "They were halfway to the airport before they remembered her."

The Ramburs haven't heard from them since. And their hope has been colored with resignation.

"You always think if you just had the opportunity to talk to them, to get things straight they would understand," Betty says quietly. "We still feel that maybe something could change."

The Ramburs consider themselves just one of many thousands of families who have had to deal with the pain of losing a child to a cult. It's not a pain they are anxious to communicate. But when phone calls from parents across the country began pouring in to them early this year, they felt a need to speak out.

As Southern California organizers of an anti-cult national education group called Citizens for Freedom Foundation (CFF), the Ramburs have heard that COG members are moving back to the country. Up until recently, 90 percent of COG followers reportedly lived in communes outside the country. But following the mass suicides at Jonestown, members began returning to the United States.

Families contacting the Ramburs reported receiving similar, phone calls from their long-silent children requesting round-trip tickets home. In many cases, hopeful parents sent the tickets, only to be disappointed when their children left abruptly seven days later.

"They have been told to return to the country to spread love, to infiltrate the churches, to make people believe they are respectable Christians," explains Betty. "It's a response to Guyana. They say they are trying to change the image cults have now. Sometimes they say they are no longer members of the Children of God. They've changed the organization's name to Family of Love, so that takes care of that."

Because of reported prostitution, rape and incest within the organization, the Children of God has been controversial almost since its beginnings in 1968.

Evangelist preacher "Moses" David Berg, his family and a few followers originally started it as a "Teens for Christ" coffeehouse in Huntington Beach.

"They were difficult to communicate with when they came home," explains Betty. "First they said they weren't really connected with the group. Then Robert, Kay's husband, said he was a leader, high up the ladder in public relations for the group."

"Everything was real nice as far as them trying to make us believe they love us. But it was very superficial," added Rambur. "You somehow knew they were lying."

"I asked Kay once if Berg told her to kill Mom and Dad, if she would," McCullough says. "She looked me square in the eyes and said, 'I'd have to.'"

Reared in a Catholic household, captain of the flag corps at Hilltop High School, Kay was always considered by her family as a "leadership-type" person. She was 22 and expecting to marry in a month when she flew to Berkeley to meet her fiancé in July 1971.

In a park there, two men playing guitars approached her and asked if they could sing her a song. When they left, she followed.

"She left her purse, her clothes, her fiancé, everything," says Rambur. "A couple of weeks later we got this letter that she was devoting her life to Christ and had joined some Bible college. It was the first we had ever heard of the Children of God."

The Ramburs finally traced their daughter to the organization's commune near Fort Worth, Texas. According to Rambur, for 14 hours they pleaded with members of the sect, who insisted Kay was not going to leave.

Rambur says members broke the headlights of his car and finally dragged Kay from the vehicle. The couple left without their daughter.

"When we left we realized we had with us all of Kay's study materials. When we began looking through it we realized what kind of organization this was. They terrorized the membership in order to control them. Part of the doctrine was to lie, cheat, steal, rip off society because society was the enemy.

"As we gained more information," he explains, "and more kids were getting out, we found that they taught members to hate their parents, to sign over their possessions, to allow the organization to censor their mail. In Kay's case, I feel they used everything from simple persuasion to absolute brainwashing."

Months after their return from Texas, the Ramburs saw Kay on a COG-sponsored television program. "She was telling how she was into drugs and prostitution before she found the Children of God. Then all of a sudden the Children of God was some great thing saving kids from drugs."

In November 1972 Kay called her parents asking to come home. "After three days we weren't making any progress," explains Rambur. "She was like a zombie. Then all of a sudden it was like the shade went up. She said she didn't want anything to do with the Children of God."

It was like everything was over. She was free. At that time I didn't know that she could flip back."

Kay flipped back

"We never intended to interfere in our daughter's life," he explains. "We don't blame her for anything. We just feel like she is being victimized by the Children of God. If Kay follows the dictates of David Berg she is prostituting for Berg. As her father I just can't make myself accept that my daughter is prostituting herself."

"That was the last time we heard from her until Christmas."

Help lighten the electric load.

If you do the heavy housework in the morning, here's what you'll be doing. The baking. The dishwashing. The laundry. And the vacuuming.

But you'll be doing something else, too. Something that's very important. By giving your electric appliances the afternoon off, you'll be helping to lighten the load from noon to 6 p.m. That's when homes, stores, offices and factories turn on air conditioners to beat the afternoon heat.

Give your appliances the afternoon off. Then Edison can put off building expensive new power plants. And you'll help keep your electric bills down.

Photographers can enter fair contest

Sab Bernardino County photographers — both amateur and professional — are invited to submit their work for display at the San Bernardino County Fair at Victorville Aug. 21-26.

Mary Lue Garrison and Daniel Fernandez, co-chairmen, stated that entries, four per person, plus fees of $1 per print, may be submitted at the fair office through July 25. The prints themselves will only be accepted at the office between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. on Aug. 15, they stressed.

Divisions include both black and white and color prints in the two classes, they explained. In the black and white classes are contemporary - abstract and/or experimental; animal - any creature except a human being; human interest - people and/or animals photographed in an interesting or intriguing way or circumstance; pictorial - picturesque scenes, such as landscapes or seascapes; portrait - portraying the features or personality of a person or persons; miscellaneous - any photo that does not fit in other classes.

In color the Upland News; Rancho Cucamonga Times; Montclair Tribune. classifications are animal, portrait, pictorial and miscellaneous. For color prints the exhibitor will need to bring in the slide to show the chairmen at the time the prints are brought in. However, it will be returned to the exhibitor immediately.

Ribbons will be given for First, Second, Third and honorable mention in each division. The co-chairman said cash awards will be given but will depend upon the number of entries in each division and after the expenses incurred by the department.

Size of prints, both black and white and color, may range from 8 inches by 10 inches to 16 inches by 20 inches and may be mounted on a 16-by-20-inch mat board only. No other type of mounting will be accepted. The photos must have been taken within the last two years, the chairman said.

Juvenile court facility planned in West End

Court hearings for juveniles charged with a crime but not in custody will begin in September in a remodeled county office building at Mountain Avenue and Sixth Street in Ontario.

But the prospect of a permanent juvenile court facility in the West End is far in the future, if then, according to county Supervisor Robert O. Townsend.

Townsend joined city and police administrators from Ontario, Upland, Montclair and Chino Wednesday at Montclair City Hall to review the need for a local juvenile court.

Court hearings for incarcerated juveniles will continue to be held in San Bernardino.

Local officials at the meeting Wednesday were pleased that out-of-custody juvenile court cases will soon be heard in the West End because this will take care of nearly 90 percent of their caseload.

Police officials present said they appreciated Townsend's push for a place to hold out-of-custody cases, but reminded him the need for a juvenile court facility is acute.

Townsend told police officials that the first step toward considering a local juvenile court to handle in-custody cases would be the employment of a consultant to research the idea.

Money for hiring a consultant was part of the county's 1978-79 budget, but was not spent and will be carried over to the coming budget, Townsend said.

The consultant, if hired this year, would study whether a juvenile court facility in the West End would be "cost effective," and if so, where the facility should be located and what services it should provide, he said.

Consultations would be held with each police department.

"I can't take the idea to the board now," Townsend said. "They'd laugh me right out of the room."

"The first thing they'd want to know is how much it would cost, and I can't give them that information until a consultant completes a study," he said.

The meeting was called by Montclair Councilman Nelson Gentry, long-time advocate of the need for a court facility to handle the ever-increasing number of in-custody juvenile court cases in the West End. Supervisor Cal McElwain was invited to the meeting but did not attend.

The advantages of a local juvenile court facility, cited by police officials, include:

— Transportation, salary and paperwork costs could be reduced if police officers did not have to drive into San Bernardino for every in-custody juvenile case.

— Victims and witnesses of juvenile crimes would be more apt to file charges and testify at a local court than at one in San Bernardino.

— Communication between court and police officials would improve if a court was located in the West End.

— Court cases could be better handled and the conviction rate of juveniles charged with crimes would increase if a court was located in the West End.

— The inconsistency in the sentences given convicted juveniles would decrease if court officials knew more about the local community and understood local problems.

Claremont chapter

Red Cross honors West Ender

By VONNE ROBERTSON
Staff Writer

Three long-time volunteers were honored by the Claremont Chapter American Red Cross during its annual meeting.

Alfred B. Focke, Claremont resident and retired college professor, and Irene Yamamoto, West End resident and chapter instructor trainer, were presented Good Neighbor awards. Marian S. Lett of Claremont, who began her service with Red Cross in 1929, was given the Volunteer of the Year Award.

The evening included the election of new chapter board members and officers.

Focke is March enrollment chairman and presently involved in seeking funds to support the chapter's many community activities. He filled the same post last year. In addition, Focke served as Claremont chapter disaster chairman in 1976 and is now an adviser on the disaster committee.

A retired physicist and professor from Harvey Mudd College, Focke is an expert on the cause and prediction of earthquakes and the effects of conventional and nuclear weapons.

Mrs. Yamamoto began her career in Red Cross in 1966 in Long Beach and became active in the Claremont chapter in 1974. She holds instructor authorizations in advanced first aid and emergency care, standard first aid and personal safety, cardiopulmonary resuscitation basic life support, cardiopulmonary resuscitation modular system and basic first aid.

She has personally manned and staffed almost every first aid station set up by the Claremont chapter, including a bicycle race, a horse show, the Fourth of July activities in Claremont and a LaMaze seminar at the Claremont Colleges.

Mrs. Lett, who started her career in Red Cross as a water safety and first aid volunteer in La Porte, Ind., has been chairman of volunteers with the Claremont chapter since 1974. She has served on the board of governors nominating committee of the American National Red Cross. She has assisted the Southern California Division Disaster Seminar for the past four years and originated the idea of creating a training program called VITA Fair (Volunteer In-Depth Training) for all boards of directors members and key volunteers.

Mrs. Lett is also active in the Crippled Children's Society, Girl Scouts, Cancer Society, Pomona Valley Voluntary Action Center and the United Way.

Margaret Hodder was elected chairman of the board for a second term. Officers named to serve with her are John Crowe, first vice chairman; Mrs. Lett, second vice chairman; Mary Halstad, secretary; and John H. Calvin, treasurer.

New members elected to the board are Russell Johnson, Josephine Myers, Alex Hughes, Ross Kolodge, Vernon Paine and Carol Peters.

Re-elected as board members are Dr. Francis

Irene Yamamoto

M. Hearst, Mahalia Perry, Marcella Johnson, Crowe, Focke, Mrs. Halstad, Warren Knox and Mrs. Lett.

NEW high passbook rate

Starting July 1st the annual interest-rate on passbook account is raised 1/4% ... to 5 1/2%. No change in the passbook's flexibility. Add-to or take-from your passbook any amount, any time. Funds still earn each day of deposit. No penalty, whatsoever, for withdrawal. You need a passbook account to supplement your time certificates.

NEW 4-year certificate

... as of July 1st and requiring $100 or more as opening balance. The annual interest rate is 1% under the four-year average U.S. Treasury Securities rate effective the day you open the account. New rates will be announced monthly.

NEW greatly reduced minimum deposits

Beginning July 1st, opening balances have been dramatically lowered on the several Southwest certificates formerly requiring $1000. Now, with much less funds, you can open the time certificate which suits you best. However, federal law requires a substantial interest penalty for early withdrawals on all certificates.

Don't forget...

the high-yielding $10,000, 26-week T-Bill certificate. The interest-quotation (not compounded) is based on the discount rate for the most recent weekly Treasury Bill auction figure.

The Via Verde Country Club (virtually in your backyard) caters to your social and recreational needs with golf, tennis, swimming and formal dining; and close by is a 2,200-acre park with swimming, hiking, camping, boating and fishing fun for the whole family.

Your home at Via Verde Point is designed to make entertaining impressive yet easy: the living rooms are spacious, with vaulted ceilings, fireplaces and adjoining formal dining areas; large family rooms are convenient to the spacious kitchens; and built-ins abound—microwave ovens, dishwashers, quality counters and cabinetry, air conditioning and full carpeting.

Finally, these homes have been carefully spaced to give 20, 30 and sometimes 40 feet of "privacy space" between your home and that of your nearest neighbor.

Exchange students due

Host families for 250 foreign exchange students who will arrive in Southern California in August are now being sought by Youth for Understanding, a non-profit international student exchange program.

The students range in age from 14 to 18, are considered good to excellent students and have studied English for at least two years. They will come from 23 countries in Europe, Latin America and the Far East to live with an American family for one year while attending regular high school classes.

Host families are asked to accept their foreign exchange student as a member of the family — not as a guest — and to provide room and board, a place to study and a friendly supportive atmosphere. If problems cannot be resolved within a family, trained YFU counselors are available to offer guidance or, if necessary, to relocate the student.

Host families may specify the country of origin, age, sex and personal interests of their exchange students. Ideally, each host family and foreign student will have an opportunity to correspond before the student's arrival in August.

Host families are the central focus of the student exchange experience in the Youth for Understanding program. It is through living and interacting as a member of an American family that international students learn about the American way of life and system of values," states Steve Wilkes, regional director. Wilkes adds that the 250 selected host families in Southern California will join over 7,000 families worldwide who will open their homes.

For details at becoming a YFU host family, contact Steve Wilkes, regional director, (213) 670-1535, at Youth for Understanding, 5316 W. Imperial Hwy., No. 220, Los Angeles, CA 90045.

Car pools to prisons formed by local group

West End residents visiting friends or relatives in Northern California prisons can now take advantage of car pools to those areas.

The local chapter of Friends Outside, area volunteers dedicated to helping the families of prisoners cope with their problems, has organized car pools to several Northern California prisons, according to Helen Fayloga, Friends spokeswoman.

She said the organization is also hoping to organize car pools to local prisons, the California Institution for Men, Youth Training School and California Institution for Women.

Persons interested in forming local car pools to cut their gasoline use while visiting local institutions should contact Friends Outside at 597-5428, she said.

Northern California institutions to which car pools are already organized include: California Conservation Center, Lesson in Susanville, California Medical Facility in Vacaville, Sierra Conservation Center in Jamestown, San Quentin, Duell Vocational Institute at Tracy, Folsom Prison, California Training Facility at Soledad, California Men's Colony at San Luis Obispo and California Correctional Institution at Tehachapi.

Gift presented by Uplanders

A check for $1,220 was presented by the New Uplanders Club to Battalion Fire Chief Don Johnson of the Upland Fire Department toward the purchase of the Lucas Rescue Tool.

The presentation was made during the club's installation luncheon held recently at Diconso's Restaurant, Upland.

The Lucas Rescue Tool is used primarily for rescuing victims trapped in automobiles. It saves critical time when medical emergency aid is needed to save a life. Due to the response of various organizations, the City of Upland will soon be able to purchase this multi-use tool.

This money-raising project has been the main philanthropic endeavor of the New Uplanders Club for the year.

Serving as president of the 292-member club for the coming year will be Mary Curtin, who was installed following luncheon. Serving with her will be: Jean Geffen, vice president; Dee Windhorn, secretary; Betty Overhulse, treasurer; Sonja Hoch, historian; and Mary Ellen Leonard, parliamentarian.

General board chairmen will be: Janet Wood, activities; Joan Combs, cheer; Barbara Ryan, membership; Fran Schneck, newsletter; June Shankwiler, philanthropy; Sue Castaldi, program; Lynda Kunce, publicity; Jenny Coffman, social; Deen White, telephone; and Wanda Zabkiw, ways and means.

Anyone interested in membership in the club may call Mrs. Ryan, 982-0752, or Mrs. White at 982-0320.

Now we can show a healthier interest in smaller accounts.

New No-Minimum Certificates

- Affects new certificates of deposit*
- Any amount earns high interest
- Your choice of time schedules

New 5 1/2% Passbook Rate

- 1/4% increase
- Automatic for current savers

New 7.85% 4-to-10 Year Account

- No minimum deposit
- High interest linked to U.S. Treasury securities

Rate effective July 1 through 31, 1979.

On July 1, Santa Fe Federal Savings introduces a highly interesting trio of ways to save money.

And they're for people who want to start small — but who also want to earn in a big way — especially in terms of the high interest we can offer.

For instance, consider our new no-minimum 4-to-10 year account, which returns compounded interest that's set according to U.S. Treasury securities. It pays you 1% less than the already substantial interest for selected securities, announced monthly. Since the going rate at the time you open this account remains constant for four to ten years, it means a sizeable return on your secure investment.

And if you've been stashing cash to get the old $1,000 minimum for a certificate of deposit, stop saving it at home. Because we're eliminating that requirement, too. Just bring any amount to Santa Fe Federal, take your pick of time plans — and we'll make sure your dollars earn top dollar.

Of course, while federal regulations require substantial penalties for early withdrawal, the longer your money stays with us, the bigger your payoff.

What's more, we're giving regular passbook accounts a big boost — up to 5 1/2%, with no minimum and no withdrawal penalties. It happens automatically for our current savers, and it means that your hard-working funds are always handy, ready for action when you are.

But for complete details, drop by any Santa Fe Federal office today.

And find out how we'll help you show a healthier profit.

Our interest starts with you.

Meals in space improve

By STEVE GRAY
Copley News Service
While scientists can put a man on the moon, they haven't been able to furnish astronauts with an appealing meal in space.

Until now.

No longer will space crews face bland, humdrum food served in plastic tubes so familiar to Mercury and Gemini astronauts.

Never again will they have to consume that pasty mixture that was supposed to be a turkey dinner but tasted remarkably like oatmeal.

For the first time since manned space flight, the crew aboard the space shuttle orbiter will be offered a variety of appealing foods during their mission.

Although crews aboard the three Skylab missions fared better than their predecessors, the shuttle crew will have the largest variety of 74 different foods and 20 beverages.

The astronauts will have a different menu for six consecutive days.

Caloric content also has been increased to 3,000 a day, because tests have shown that working astronauts need the same number of calories as ground-based people.

A real oven will be in operation for the first time. A crew member will be able to assemble a meal for four in about five minutes, heat it for about an hour, and serve.

The shuttle galley also will provide more comfortable dining surroundings, with the oven, a unit for washing up, hot and cold running water and a dining table.

Types of food planned for the space shuttle include:

Thermostabilized — thermal-heat processed foods canned or packaged in foil pouches such as cheese spread, tuna, or beef with barbecue sauce.

Intermediate moisture — foods preserved by controlling the available moisture, such as dried apricots, peaches and breakfast bars.

Rehydratable — dehydrated foods reconstituted with water, such as scrambled eggs, beef patties, chicken and noodles, and all beverages.

Irradiated — foods exposed to ionizing radiation to effect preservation, such as bread, rolls and beef steak.

Freeze-dried — foods with all water removed (to be rehydrated or eaten as is, such as strawberries, shrimp and bananas).

Other foods, such as nuts and cookies, will be served in their natural form.

Popular eating utensils

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — To those unfamiliar with Oriental terms, k'uai-tzu might sound like the name of a new marital art or next season's replacement for Kung-Fu. But it is actually the name of the second most popular eating utensil in the United States and, by a wide margin, the most widely used eating utensil in the world.

K'uai-tzu (pronounced kwi-zu), or chopsticks, were used in China in the fourth century B.C., long before Europeans stopped eating with their hands.

"Today, chopsticks remain the most popular eating utensil in China, Japan, Korea, Vietnam and other East Asian countries influenced by Chinese culture," says a Chinese food consultant Anne Byrd, "while here in the United States, they rank behind the knife and fork in eating utensil popularity."

Historians believe the use of chopsticks began because of the way Chinese food is prepared. Generally meats and vegetables are cut into small pieces before being served which eliminates the need for a knife at the dinner table.

Usually about eight inches long, chopsticks are normally made of wood or bamboo, although modern ones may be made of plastic. More elaborate pairs are made of enameled wood, ivory or bone, and have even been known to be made out of gold, brass and silver.

"Through centuries of use, chopsticks have also been associated with many superstitions or practices," Ms. Byrd points out.

Chopsticks have been used as gift items between friends sometimes decorated with inscribed poetry or painted with good luck designs. A gift of chopsticks to newlyweds suggests a wish that the couple will quickly have children.

"Also, it is still common for a pair of chopsticks to be placed upright in the bowl of rice offered at a memorial service for the dead," adds the Chun King consultant. "The chopsticks thus mark the sacredness of the offered rice, and also are a sign to prevent the coming of evil spirits to disturb the peace of the dead."

The word "chop" is derived from k'uai, which means "quick" or "speedy," but many people experience just the opposite when they use them.

But mastering the Oriental art of chopsticks is not difficult, as some believe. All it takes is practice.

Beginners can learn to best maneuver chopsticks by starting with frozen egg rolls, heated crisp and savory

Bishops discuss immigrants' plight

A historic first meeting here of U.S. and Mexican bishops was called by one participating priest "a real salto" (jump) in the direction of important dialogue between the two countries on the problems of the immigrant and the migrant.

Participants left El Carmelo Retreat House with no startling announcements but with a hope that the common needs of the 4 million Hispanic Catholics they represent can be met.

Host Bishop Phillip F. Straling of the San Bernardino Diocese asked that the next session be in Mexico. A date of Oct. 23 was picked for that meeting in Tijuana with Bishop Juan Jesus Posadas O'Campo as the host.

Together for almost six hours, including a break for lunch, were Bishop Gilbert Chavez, auxiliary of the San Diego Diocese; Bishop Manuel Perez Gil Gonzales of the Mexicali Diocese, and bishops Posadas and Straling. Also, Rev. George Gonzales of Riverside, co-chancellor for Hispanic affairs in the host diocese, and Rev. Frank Riley, an Augustinian priest, who works with migrants at the San Ysidro center.

Others playing a significant role at the meeting were three members of a local delegation to last January's Latin American Bishops' Council (CELAM) at Puebla, Mexico. They are Rev. Patrick Guillen of Corona; Rev. Joseph Pawlicki, a Holy Cross priest from Palm Springs, and Dr. Armando Navarro of Ontario, executive director of Congreso para Pueblos Unidos (CPU).

The El Carmelo meeting was sparked in part by the Puebla conference and by questions raised by the U.S. delegation. Bishop Straling said. It was at Puebla that Pope John Paul II encouraged church involvement in social concerns and partnership with the poor in their quest for human dignity.

Latin American bishops stressed the role of the laity in improving the quality of life, especially for the poor, by working in government and political parties.

"Out of this meeting, hopefully there will be a process of coordination, a process of understanding, a process of sharing — a process that is long overdue," said Navarro after Wednesday's Redlands meeting. He was one of those who helped draft for the pope a "declaration for a New Vision" on behalf of the 20 million U.S. Catholics who are Hispanic.

Navarro said, "The problem we are facing in terms of immigration is not one that can be dealt with just in Mexico. It obviously has to be dealt with here."

Father Pawlicki, born in Michigan of Polish parents, for 25 years has worked with Hispanic peoples in the U.S. as well as in Latin America and Mexico. He said he was delighted with the outcome of the meeting that took a global issue and dealt with it from the regional viewpoint.

Bishop Chavez expressed pleasure at this new turn for regional dialogue.

Nothing like corn fresh from garden

There's nothing quite like corn freshly picked from your own garden. Make room in your vegetable garden for a patch of sweet corn plump with succulent kernels bursting with juice whose taste is unequalled by anything you could buy at the store.

If you are one of the lucky gardeners in the state with early planting dates, you're probably already harvesting. Remember to pick the ears and get them cool as soon as possible. Corn rapidly loses its sugar when temperatures are high but if it is near 32 degrees corn will keep well for several days.

For those of us still waiting patiently for juicy ears, we must be content with watering and weed pulling. Depending on variety, air temperature, soil moisture and sunshine, a seedling will take from 60-90 days before it can offer a harvest. This is one crop where successive plantings are extremely worthwhile. Try planting seed every two weeks during the first part of the growing season, or plant early, middle and late varieties at the same time if you haven't already. The harvest will then be spread over the season rather than overwhelming you with more than you can eat for one or two short weeks.

For the gourmet taste - treat of homegrown corn, little demand is placed on the gardener - just warm temperatures, sunshine, plenty of water and a balanced fertilizer. Plant the seeds after the danger of frost is past in well-drained soil and thin the plants to one every 12 inches or so. Lay the rows out in a square rather than linear or rectangular patterns to insure good pollination.

A week or two after the plants sprout, they appreciate some fertilizer and again when they are two feet tall. Eliminate all weeds but be careful not to cultivate below the surface soil or you will injure the roots. Keep the plants well-watered especially when they are forming ears, and, don't forget, mulches will aid in retaining the soil moisture.

There are a few pests that like corn as much as we do.

Aphids are fairly harmless, but the corn earworm should be controlled with sprays.

Anthony Longhetti, director of the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department Criminalistics Laboratory, explains the work done at his laboratory is based on time-tested techniques with the aid of sophisticated modern technology.

County crime lab not so mysterious after all

Many people, through television and the movies, have become familiar with an agency known commonly as the "crime lab."

The impression: it's a super-type laboratory where all kinds of evidence — hair, fingernail scrapings, bullets and guns — can be analyzed and positively linked to a crime.

But while all sorts of seemingly mysterious analyses can be done in the crime lab, more frequently the work is routine and based on long-established techniques, according to Anthony Longhetti, director of the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department Criminalistics Laboratory.

Story by Peggy Ziegler

Photos by Craig Swanson

The lab is used by police agencies from throughout the county.

"We (crime lab personnel) don't solve crimes. We only examine physical evidence and get the results to the investigator," Longhetti said.

Then it is up to the investigator to determine if he has enough evidence to arrest someone, the director explains.

Although the laboratory is run by the county sheriff's department, Longhetti says evidence from police departments and the California Highway Patrol are currently analyzed at the San Bernardino facility.

The bulk of evidence handled by the crime lab is blood, urine and breath tests to determine alcohol content. Longhetti estimated about 10,000 of those cases are handled each year.

Analyzing narcotics and controlled substances constitutes about another 4,000 cases a year, he said.

He considered those cases relatively easy, requiring at the most an hour of an analyst's time.

But the most important work at the crime lab comes when investigating evidence gathered from murders, rapes, assaults and sometimes robberies, Longhetti said. Although the number of such cases is small, Longhetti says each case can sometimes consume up to 100 hours of work by the lab technicians.

"What this amounts to is a lot of work," Longhetti said. "The only way we can get by is by 'prioritizing' the work load according to the court schedule."

He explains that the analysis is not usually done until a case is ready for trial.

"In this way we can prevent the cost of doing things not needed," Longhetti said.

The nuts and bolts of the operation is microscopic examination of evidence. But even that examination cannot determine beyond a shadow of a doubt that two items are related.

"About all we can do is say there is a pretty good reason to believe certain things are similar," Longhetti said.

Taking hair as an example, Longhetti says it is studied for its color composition, internal structure, pigment granules, size, shape, distribution and length.

"We can make a pretty good assumption it came from a victim or suspect," he said.

In examining bullets, Longhetti says the laboratory can determine the type, make and model of gun it may have been fired from by marks etched on it during firing.

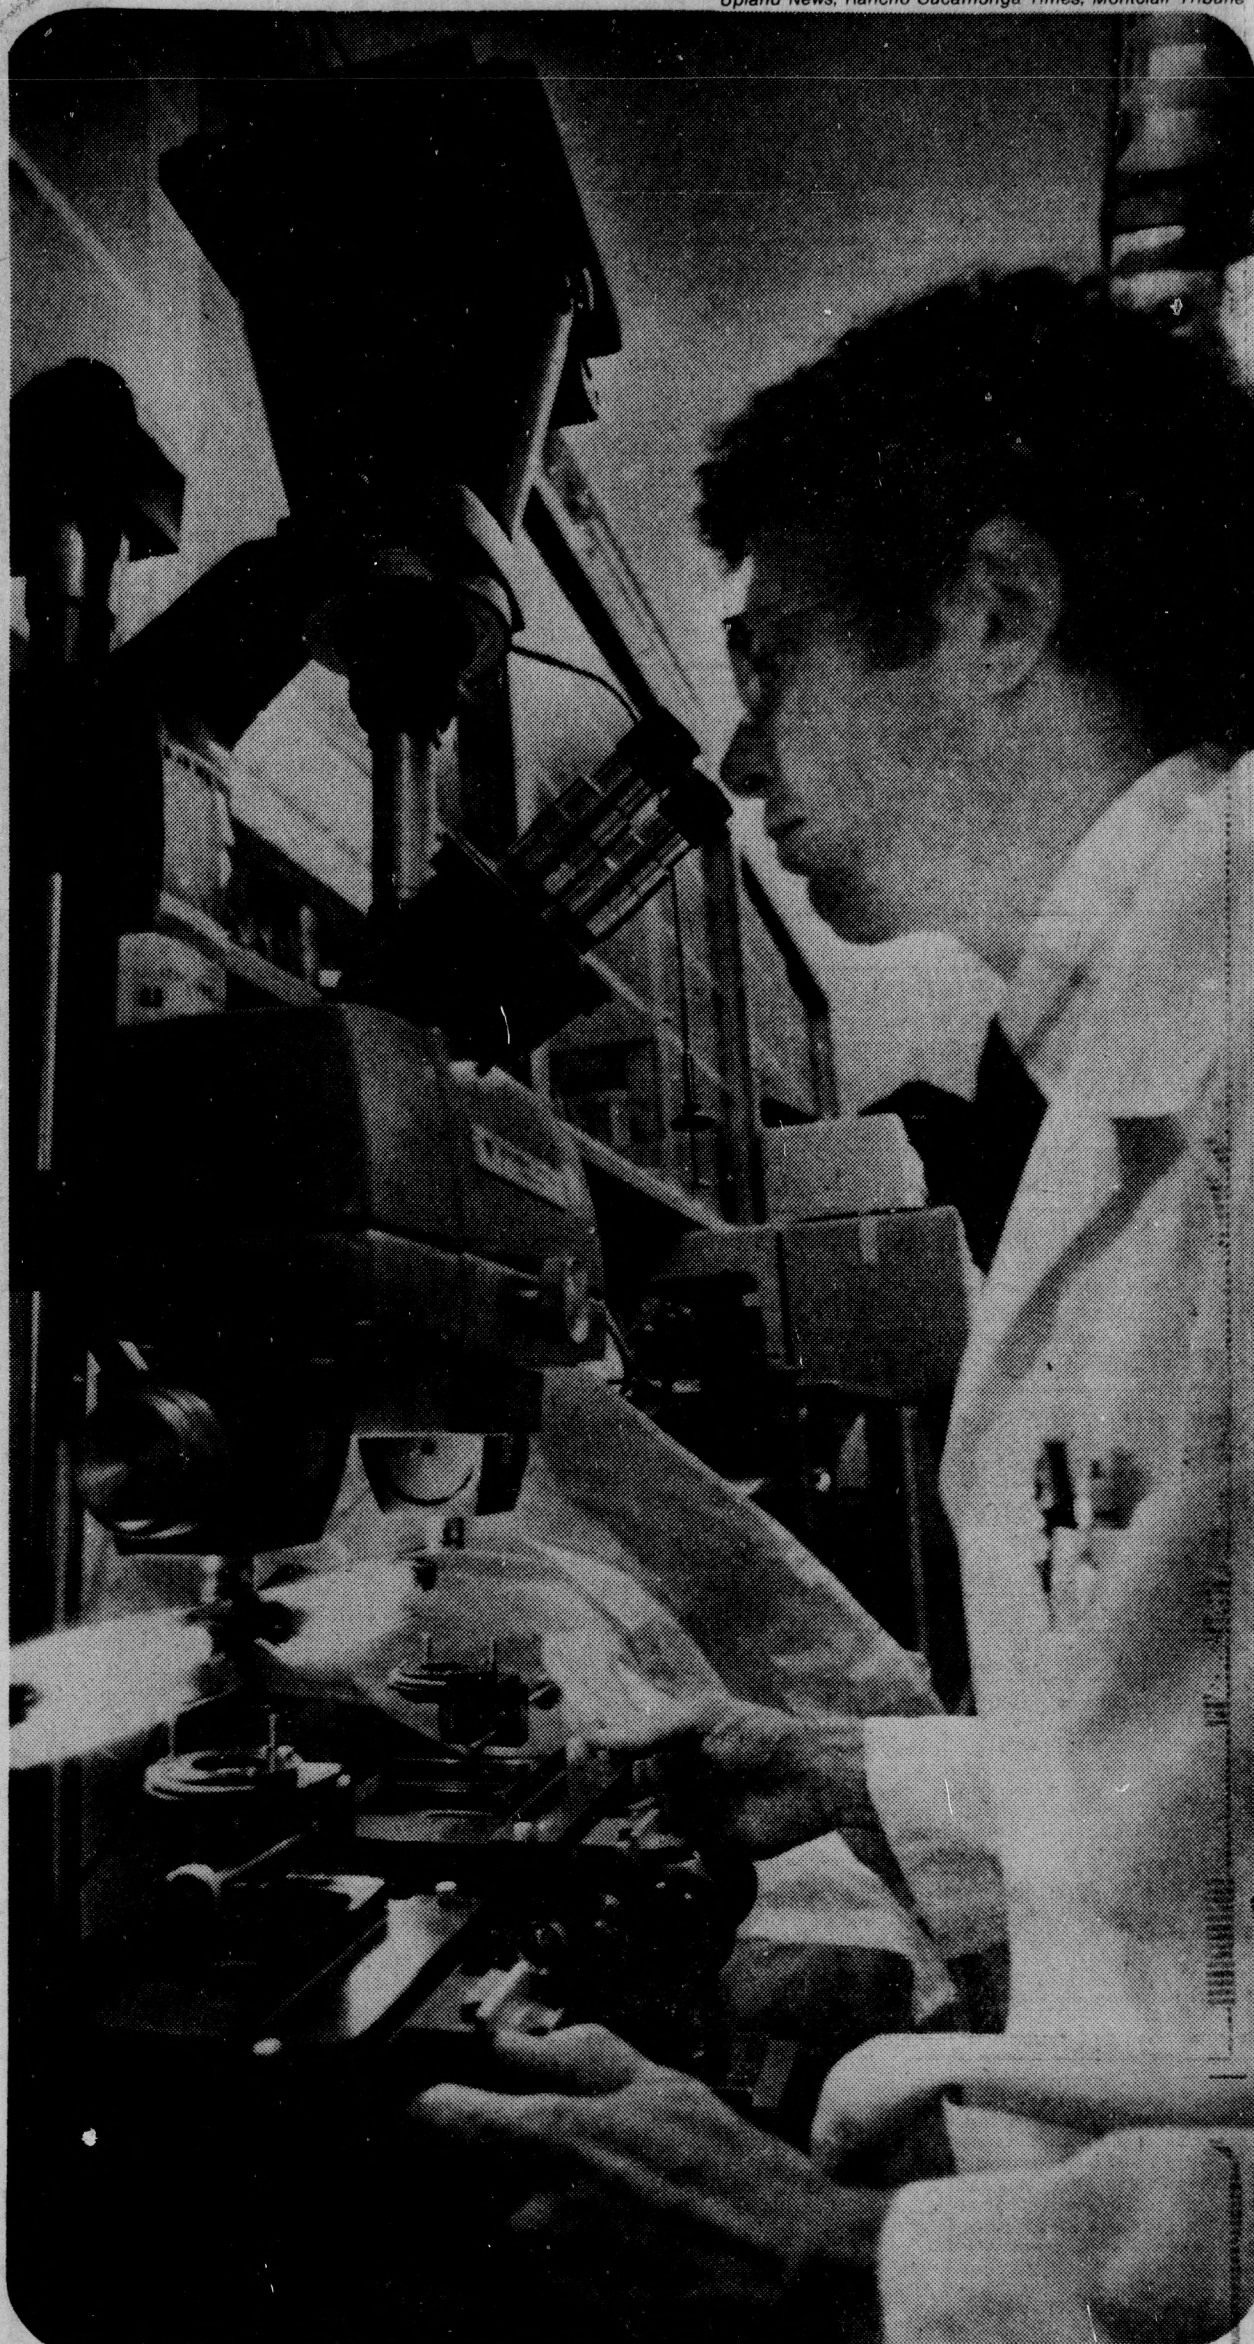

If the gun the bullet is suspected of being fired from is available, a test bullet can be fired through it and the two compared for similar markings. Although commonly referred to as ballistics, Longhetti says the term is incorrect.

Ballistics is the study of the flight of powder-propelled projectiles, he noted. He says he prefers to refer to their work as simply "firearms study."

One of the more interesting cases handled by the laboratory recently, according to Longhetti, was a murder investigation into two decapitated torsos and a skull found in the Mt. Baldy area.

"This case is interesting from several standpoints," he said. "First it was a job that was not only handled in our lab, but the one in Los Angeles (one body and the skull were found in Los Angeles County) and with the medical examiner's office."

"Our first problem was the question of the head and if

A comparison microscope used in firearms identification is demonstrated by Bill Baird, a criminalist at the San Bernardino Criminalistics Laboratory. The microscope can also be used to examine tool marks left by burglars. It is only one of many microscopes used in the laboratory to examine evidence from criminal cases.

it matched either body. There was some uncertainty at first."

Longhetti says the vertebrae on the bodies and the head were examined and it was found that the headless body found north of Upland and the skull found off Mt. Baldy Road matched.

"There was a ragged cut that didn't exactly match, but they were both definitely sawed and the number of vertebrae matched," Longhetti said.

Hair was also examined. "From the analysis we had a pretty good reason to believe evidence found at the two scenes were similar and it was a good assumption the head belonged to the body," he said.

The same type of painstaking analysis is done in rapes, assaults and hit-and-run accidents, he says.

The crime lab also sifts through evidence collected from fires where arson may be the cause, he points out.

While seemingly fantastic things may appear to be accomplished, Longhetti says it's only the result of time-tested practices. The machines may be more sophisticated, but the job is the same: close inspection and analysis.

Another aspect of work done at the crime lab is blood alcohol analysis. The machine here is a gas chromatograph that analyzes blood samples for alcohol content. Operating the machine is Mike Kellett. The results are printed out on a paper tape, which can then be entered as evidence in court proceedings. Kellett also examines narcotics for the sheriff's department laboratory.

Miniature dreams come true

In model building there are choices to suit many tastes

When it comes to the hobby of model building, the sky's no limit. Model aircraft builders, for instance, can have the experience of seeing their creations slice through the air and perform intricate maneuvers that rival those of the real thing.

More down-to-earth types can build their own miniature rail empire, operate radio-controlled boats or cars, or construct scale models of anything from clipper ships to 747s.

In short, model building offers something for everyone.

"I think the main appeal is in being able to own something, even though it's just a model, of something I otherwise wouldn't be able to afford," said Dick Glover, owner of an Ontario hobby shop. "I might not be able to buy my own airplane, but I can build a model of one that can really fly."

Or even one that doesn't. A plastic display model of a Boeing 727 say, can be bought for about $3. At that price, an enterprising hobbyist might want to build his own miniature airline.

Similarly, scale models of antique, sports or special-interest cars can be bought for as little as $3.50 at most hobby shops.

Though the pastime of building models can be enjoyed by children as young as 5 or 6, dealers hasten to point out that there's nothing childish about the hobby.

Looking at some of the more elaborate models, it's hard not to agree. Today's well-stocked hobby shop, for instance, offers plastic car models as large as 1/8 actual size whose price can top $75.

Such kits offer inflatable tires and complete wiring and engine detail and definitely keep the buyer occupied.

"One guy spent eight months building one of these," said Glover as he pointed to an $80 model of a Porsche 917 racing car. "Then he had to build a display case for it."

Adults can also test their skill — not to mention their nerve — in flying scale models that take months to construct and can cost upwards of $100.

Another part of the model building hobby that can take considerable skill is model railroading.

Here, the possibilities for detailing are almost endless, as there are many structures and real-life locations that can be reproduced in miniature to create realistic settings for the models themselves.

The trend in model railroading for many years has been toward miniaturization, with HO scale models replacing the large O scale equipment of the past. Today, the even smaller N scale is proving feet. It's constructed of molded plastic, balsa wood, and sheet plastic.

popular, mainly because it requires only half the space of HO.

What it costs to get started in model building, of course, depends on the type of models a hobbyist wants to build. Dealers emphasize, however, that it need not take large sums. Radio-control equipment, for instance, is actually considerably less expensive today than it was 10 years ago, thanks to solid-state electronics.

Average costs (including tools and materials) for getting started in the following hobbies were quoted by dealers as follows:

— Plastic display models, $10 on up, depending on tools and materials. These are the type that sit on the shelf. They range from cars, boats and planes to such unlikely items as the Budweiser Clydesdale eight-horse hitch.

— Powered, U-control airplanes, $35 to $200. These planes are flown in a circle at the end of control lines. Higher-priced models usually boast larger engines and sport greater detail.

— Radio-controlled planes, $230-$350. Price here is determined by engine size, amount of detail and capability of radio control equipment used. Models are relatively small, and have two-channel controls. Higher-priced models use four-channel radio control and are larger. The greater number of channels permits more control over the plane, compared to two-channel models.

— Radio-controlled boats, $350. Relatively inexpensive two-channel radio control is used in these models, but the high cost of small-scale marine hardware pushes their price into the four-channel airplane bracket.

— Radio-controlled cars, $250. These are powered by electric motors driven by rechargeable batteries. On a straightaway, the models can reach 30 mph.

— Radio-controlled helicopters, $500-$1,000. These models are expensive for several reasons. First, the kits themselves use many machined metal parts and can cost more than $350. In addition, more complex radio equipment — five channels — is used than for other models.

— Trains, $35 on up. Costs vary greatly here. Dealers say a basic train set (locomotive, cars, loop of track, power pack) can be purchased for less than $50 in HO scale. On the other hand, hobbyists can spend as much as $1,000 for a single locomotive.

Dealers point out that hobbyists need not invest heavily in tools or equipment to get started in model building. Those interested in plastic display models, for instance, need only a 99-cent razor knife, files, glue and paint — or a total tool and material expense of $5 to $7 — to get started.

Builders of wood flying models need a few more tools, but total expense need not be high. An $8 set of knives will get a beginner through most jobs, dealers say.

More advanced modelers may want to invest in a motorized hand tool for shaping, sanding and drilling (about $50) or an airbrush for precision painting (about $40).

Help is available for the beginning modeler at most hobby shops. Owners of some stores said they are always available to lend a hand to get beginners started in the right direction on difficult or simple tasks.

Hobby shops also have information on local clubs for the model plane, train or boat fan that can also prove helpful.

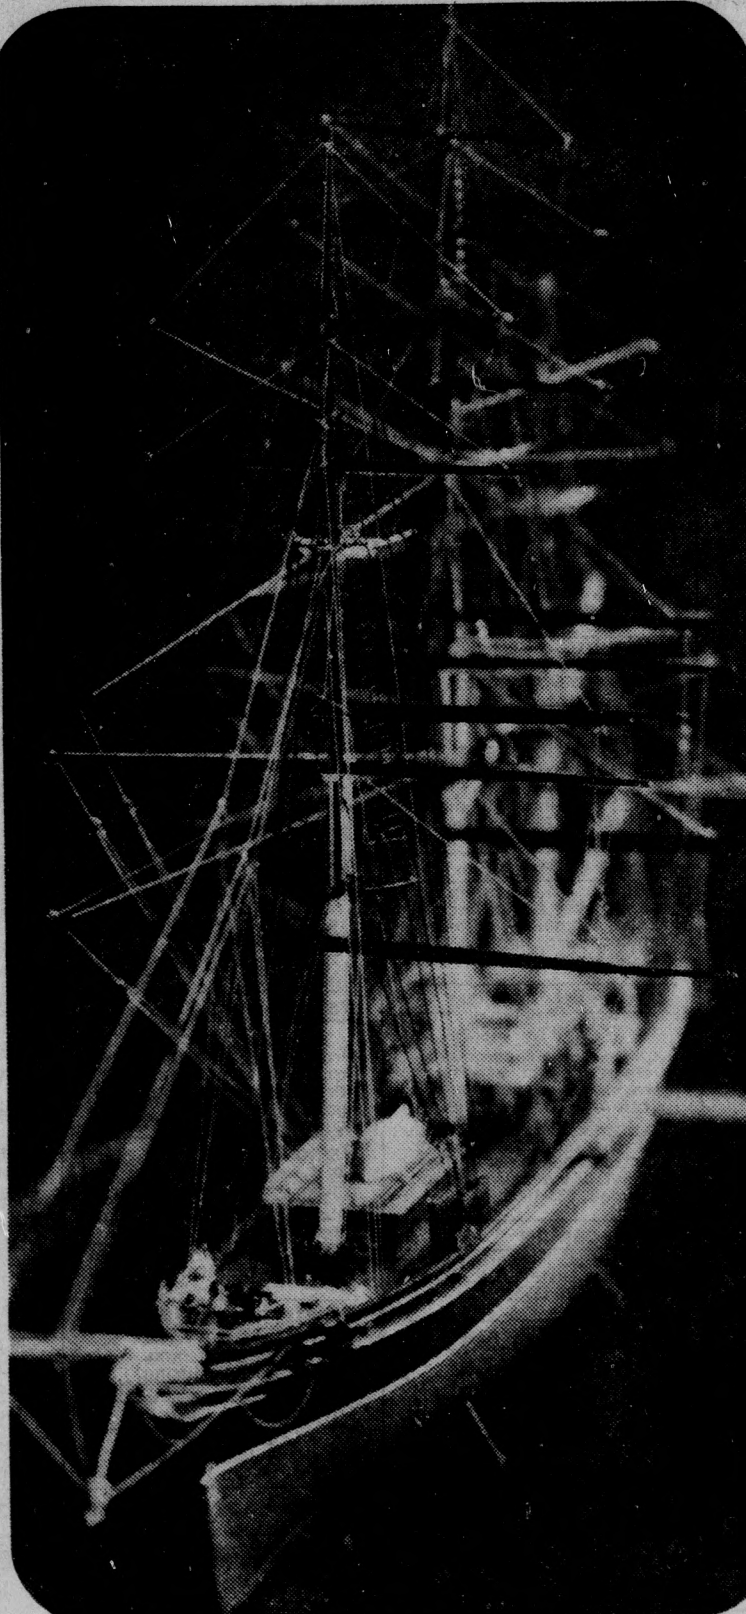

In sum, would-be modelers should not be put off by lack of experience. "All you really have to do is read and follow instructions," said Glover. "Beyond that, the only limit is your imagination."

Realistic detail can be had in models ranging in size from a three-foot-long plastic model of a clipper ship, top, to an N scale locomotive and cars.
